would get together and organize a company to develop the water power we have, this will not only be a paying investment, but it will be a great inducement for cotton factories to locate here. This will be the cheapest power for operat ing a factory which can be had ex cept natural gas. The water power would be preferable to gas from the fact there would be no possibility of it giving out. It would do no harm to investigate the question can be done. Water power is being developed to streams with no more falls than in this. Of course the cost may be something greater, yet when once completed then the cost would cease. It would also furnish the cheapest possible elec tricity. This would be of great in ducement to outside investors. The water is here, then why not use it. Why sit around and wish things were thus and so. No results will come of it.
